

A New View from The Hill

WHEN THE floodwaters left, Johnstownners found that most of their town had been washed away (see photo on right taken one week after). Most remaining buildings were so damaged they had to be torn down anyway. After the debris was hauled away, Johnstown was starting over. Below is the same photo with the debris digitally removed:

■ IMAGINE that you are a city planner designing the new Johnstown:

- HOW much of the old Johnstown should be rebuilt? Why?
- WHAT things will you do differently? Why?
- WHAT can you do to protect citizens from future floods?

■ DRAW your vision for the new Johnstown in the cleared area of the photo below. If you did “Redrawing the Map”, try matching the drawing and map.

Downtown Johnstown one week after the Flood. The photographer was standing on Yoder Hill (now Westmont) pointing the camera toward the Stone Bridge. (See dotted arrow on “Redrawing the Map.”)
